

Demographics

Demographics in the Dallas–Fort Worth region are changing as the population diversifies. Just over 17% of the population is foreign-born, with Hispanics accounting for the largest minority group, both in the region and in the state. With a growing immigrant population, the region’s workforce is relatively young and well educated. Over 60% of workers 25 years of age and older have at least some college education, with nearly a third holding a bachelor’s degree or another advanced degree.
